Literature and Life Skills: SQ, IQ, EQ and Beyond

Introduction

Literature can be defined as an artistic use of language to represent and explore human condition. Generally it means a body of work including essays, poems and novels – anything that utilizes the written word in a particular culture. The different kind of main intelligences such as IQ (Intelligence Quotient), EQ (Emotional Quotient) and SQ (Social Quotient) which help us in solving the problems of life and living better can be learnt through literature. There are also PQ (Physical Quotient), CQ (Creativity Quotient) and AQ (Adversity Quotient). We can improve them by learning from actual experiences as well as by reading about the experiences of others.

Justification

With the increasing affordability and availability of internet, much of our time is spent being entertained by movies, video games, social networking sites etc. and very less time remains available for reading the literary works of celebrated writers from the past and present. This is a sad state of affairs as we could learn so much about life skills from literature. When we read, we begin empathizing with the characters and living through them as they face various trials and tribulations of life. We can learn from their behaviour, mistakes, experiences and make better choices in our lives. The timeless works of great literary masters enrich and deepen our understanding by giving us insight into human nature and human condition.

Outcome

- It will encourage open-minded and flexible thinking.
- It will stimulate the mind, imagination and creativity.
- By providing a healthy escape from mundane life, it will relieve our stress and anxiety.
- It will enhance our capacity to empathize as it will evoke such human emotions as pity, terror, love, honour, bravery, honesty and integrity.
- It will contribute to our personal growth by stimulating our senses and sensibilities.
- Learning life skills through literature will lift and inspire a person beyond his everyday consciousness.
